

What is Eternal?

By Ronald Bartanen

Can you conceive of there ever having been simply nothing? Does the present existence of something not indicate to you that something has always been? It would defy logic to think otherwise. Could anything be simpler than to conclude that from nothing, nothing comes? We live in a complex world and a complex universe. There are only two possible explanations for the existence of matter: either it has always been and is eternal, or it was created. We must conclude that either “in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth” (Gen. 1:1), or “in the beginning was matter.” The Christian faith embraces God as the origin of all things, while atheists will accept the latter explanation for origins. However, the atheist’s faith must be confronted with perplexing dilemmas.

What is eternal? If matter is eternal, then the complex designs that we see in all things, from atoms to the universe, exist without a designer. The inescapable conclusion would be, then, that the logical order of all things has come, of itself, out of illogical chaos. Therefore, we would be forced to conclude that the conditions essential for life on planet earth just happened. All the laws of nature, we would have to conclude, exist without a law-giver. We live in a world that gives every evidence that it was designed for man. It is as acknowledged by Dr. Freeman Dyson of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, “It almost seems as if the Universe must in some sense have known we were coming.”

If matter is eternal, we have effects without causes. Christians look upon the laws of nature as God’s laws. Atheism provides no rational explanation for natural law apart from the Law-giver. Life exists, but the atheist’s faith is that life came from non-life, and that all evolved by chance. Such a claim, of course, is an assumption that is without reason and without evidence. In contrast, the Christian believes that all things were created by God. Life itself comes, not from non-life, but from the supreme Life-giver, God. Only He is eternal. We should say, as did Jeremiah, “Ah, Lord God: behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee” (Jeremiah 32:17).
